 Some words that are derived from sounds, and are peculiar only to the French.

Palalalalan. The French march
 Colin rampon. The suiffers march
 Fanfare. The sound of the Trumper
 Tamarac. The sound of the huntsmans horn
 Dindan. The noise of great bells
 Tintin. The noise of little bells
 Cliquesis. The sound of arms
 Claquesis. The shattering of the teeth
 Floufouer. The tumbling of the sea-waves
 Le hennir des chevaux. The neighing of horses
 Le groigner des porceaux. The grunting of hogs
 Le beclerement, or, beeler des brebis. The bleating of sheep
 Le miauler de chats. The mewling of cats
 La clabauder de mastins. The howling of Mastiffs
 Le japper de petits chiens. The barking of little dogs
 Le heuler de loups. The howling of wolves
 Le bugler de bœufs. The bellowing of oxen
 Le courailler des caillies. The calling of quails
 Le quillery des passereaux. The chirping of sparrows
 Le coqueret de poules. The cackling of hens.

Observe that what we use to expresse in the Participle of the present tense, the French oftentimes use the infinitive mood which becomes a substantif amongst them : as, beau parler n'ecorde pas la langue, fair speaking never makes the tongue to blister. Il n'y a n'y sel n'y sens en voire dire ; there's neither salt nor sense in your saying it.
